Logline

EO, a gray donkey with melancholic eyes and a curious spirit, begins his life as a circus performer before escaping on a trek across the Polish and Italian countryside in a journey marked by absurdity and warmth in equal measure. Legendary filmmaker Jerzy Skolimowski directs one of his most free and visually inventive films yet, placing the viewer directly in the heart and mind of the four-legged protagonist.

Synopsis

With his first film in seven years, legendary director Jerzy Skolimowski (Deep End, Moonlighting) directs one of his most free and visually inventive films yet, following the travels of a nomadic gray donkey named EO. After being removed from the traveling circus, which is the only life he's ever known, EO begins a trek across the Polish and Italian countryside, experiencing cruelty and kindness in equal measure, all the while observing the follies and triumphs of humankind. During his travels, EO is both helped and hindered by a cast of characters that includes a young Italian priest (Lorenzo Zurzolo), a Countess (Isabelle Huppert), and a rowdy Polish soccer team. Loosely inspired by Robert Bresson's Au hasard Balthazar, and featuring immersive, stunning cinematography by Michal Dymek coupled with Pawel Mykietyn's resonant score, Skolimowski's film puts the viewer in the perspective of its four-legged protagonist. EO's journey speaks to the world around us, an equine hero boldly pointing out societal ills, and serving as warning to the dangers of neglect and inaction, all while on a quest for freedom.

Production Notes

Once upon a time... EO

After a seven year absence from directing, Jerzy Skolimowski returns in great form with a contemporary fable, shot in Poland and Italy whose hero is a donkey forced to leave the circus in which he lived happily alongside the sweet young Cassandra.

Inspired by the cinema of Robert Bresson, Jerzy Skolimowski pays homage to him by creating this modern tale, whose main character is a Sardinian donkey:

"Several decades ago, I said in an interview (I think it was Cahiers du Cinéma) that the only film that moved me to tears was [Bresson's] AU HASARD BALHAZAR (1966). I think I discovered it shortly after its release. Since then, I haven't shed a single tear at the cinema. Thus, what I owe to Robert Bresson is to have acquired the strong conviction that making an animal a character in the film is not only possible but can also be a source of emotion."

EO is a poetic work, a metaphorical vision of the world.

"I wanted above all to make an emotional film, to base the narration on emotions, much more than in any of my previous films."

During his career, Jerzy Skolimowski directed many great actors, including Robert Duvall and Jeremy Irons - "two of the most generous, marvelous beings with whom I have ever worked" - but directing a donkey on screen calls for other resources.

"Directors use intellectual arguments and emotional language to provoke actors to deliver the desired effect. With my donkey, the only way to persuade him to do anything was with tenderness: words whispered in his ear and a few friendly caresses. Raising your voice, showing impatience or nervousness would have been the fastest path to disaster."

But according to the director there is something even more important:

"The main difference is that donkeys don't know what 'acting' is, they can't pretend anything - they simply ARE. They are gentle, caring, respectful, polite, and loyal. They live to the fullest in the present moment. They never show narcissism. They do not skimp on the supposed intentions of their character; and never discuss their director's vision. They are excellent actors."

To find his "actor", Jerzy Skolimowski went through a casting process:

"When we saw photos of the available donkeys, I immediately liked those of the Sardinian breed. I knew EO must be gray with white spots around the eyes. I went to a stable near Warsaw to visit the animal that had hypnotized me the most in the photos. His name was Tako. As soon as I saw him, I knew he was going to be the star of the movie."

A second casting was then carried out to find him the best possible doubles.

"We used six donkeys in total: Tako, Hola, Marietta, Ettore, Rocco, and Mela."

Jerzy Skolimowski says he learned a lot from this experience:

"Donkeys have a surprisingly idiosyncratic nature. Each one we employed had a very different character, which made the execution of each shot quite unpredictable. It was like trying to solve an exciting puzzle every day; trying to find out what such and such donkey likes, or hates, fears or adores. Sometimes something quite innocuous, like a cable left on the ground, could suddenly become an insurmountable obstacle for them. And on the other hand, something we thought would scare them - like a waterfall gushing out of a huge dam - turned out not to be a problem at all.

This understanding of the animal led the director to adapt to it, beyond what he could imagine:

"The common misconception about donkeys - that they are stubborn - is true. Sometimes it was easier for us to rearrange the scene, or such a planned camera move, than trying to convince the donkey to do something it didn't want to do."

Jerzy Skolimowski worked with Ewa Piaskowska to write the screenplay, following a now well-established method:

“EO is the third screenplay we have written together. The method is simple: one of us has an idea (in the case of EO, it was Ewa; in the case of ESSENTIAL KILLING, it was me), then we give ourselves a good brainstorming session. Then Ewa takes care of most of the writing, with me making adjustments, whether it's additions or cuts. We usually write in Polish, then Ewa always takes care of the English translation.

Like Vincent Gallo in ESSENTIAL KILLING (2010) EO seeks to escape from a hostile world.

“I wouldn't say 'escape' I don't think that's the right word. I would say 'avoid.' I try to avoid taking part in the ambient banality, injustice, violence. I made this film precisely to detach myself from human dramas, to look at the world in a broader way and from a different point of view.”

It was in Cannes — at the Directors' Fortnight — that Jerzy Skolimowski made a name for himself in 1965, with WALKOVER, his second feature film, celebrated for its innovative form.

“I've always thought that a director's mortal sin is to bore his audience. And so yes, I always try to be imaginative to instill the same ambition in my collaborators. At the time, a young American actor came to congratulate me after the screening of WALKOVER, and although my English was limited at the time, we instantly became friends. It was Jack Nicholson, who was also discovering Cannes. Smoking a joint with him on the beach that night remains one of my fondest memories of Cannes.”

This is the seventh time in his career that Jerzy Skolimowski has been invited in Competition to Cannes.

“Coming back is a bittersweet experience. Several people I've met over the years at the festival are no longer of this world, others cannot come. I too have become a bit of a recluse, I feel better in my home in the forest in the middle of nowhere. The world today does not inspire much optimism - a war is raging in Europe. It seems absurd to celebrate the release of a film, with the tragedy unfolding every day in Ukraine.”

Despite its dramatic nature, EO is enriched with funny moments. What makes Jerzy Skolimowski laugh?

“I don't think I've laughed heartily in a long time. But I do smile sometimes - especially at Bufon, my dog, for his playfulness, or for the way he tilts his head when he listens to men's conversations, as if he doesn't want to miss a word.”

EO is a film about innocence, which leads one to wonder if the director has preserved his own.

“In our cynical and unforgiving world, innocence can pass for naivety, or can be taken for a sign of weakness. But I still endeavor to cultivate what is left of the innocence I have in me.”

Interview with Ewa Piaskowska

How did you start collaborating on writing with Jerzy?

“It was the result of pure accident. Years ago, Jerzy signed an agreement with Paolo Branco to write FOUR NIGHTS WITH ANNA, for which he received the first payment. But then got involved in painting and realized of the approaching deadline only a few days prior. Instead of returning the first payment, we decided to drop everything else we were doing at the time and went ahead with the writing of the script. Because the time was short, in order to make this work we had to work together.”

Before meeting Jerzy, what was your knowledge of cinema and what type of movies were you attracted to?

“My knowledge of cinema was not at all profound, but I was always attracted to any creative expression that was out of the ordinary. “

Among Jerzy's first films, is there one in particular that, in your opinion, sums up his vision of cinema ?

"Jerzy's early Polish films have always just blown me away. The sparkling intelligence of his dialogue, resonating so clearly in Roman Polanski's KNIFE IN THE WATER and Andrzej Wajda's INNOCENT SORCERERS, the off-hand charm, the creative freedom and his auto-ironic sense of humor, always underscored by a touch of bitter idealism, have always moved me deeply."

How do you work together? Is there a particular place, a time, which favors this work in pairs?

"We seem to work best on short deadlines. :) And preferably in desolated locations. I usually work at night, Jerzy then wakes up to a set of pages, which he works on during the day."

EO really works both narratively and aesthetically. Is it a difficult balance to find, and how do you achieve it?

"Filmmaking is, I guess, a little bit like cooking. You collect the best ingredients at your disposal, throw them together, and then impatiently watch them turn into pure magic or a mediocre dish. With EO, we owe so much to our Director of Photography, Michał Dymek (and the two other DoPs involved); our editor, Agnieszka Glińska; our composer, Paweł Mykietyn; and the rest of the creative team."

Apart from writing, what does your work as a producer consist of? What were maybe the major difficulties during the production of a film whose "hero" is an animal?

"I am responsible for the paperwork, I am on set for every minute of the film's creation, I am involved in Jerzy's work with the editor, the composer, and the sound designer. We are a tiny company, we operate more like a family & friends unit than a typical production enterprise."

How do you work with Jeremy Thomas?

"Jeremy is a producing icon. It has always been a true privilege to see how he thinks, what he prioritizes, how he comes to his decisions, or works with directors. He's in a class of his own."

Agata Kordos
(Animal Handler)

Making movies with animals

"We have been working as Animal Wranglers on film sets for over 30 years and have experience working with many different species of animals. All the animals that take part in film production are specially selected according to their physical and psychological abilities. Before shooting, the animals are accustomed to the conditions on the set, and all scenes involving animals are consulted with us, which allows us to prepare them properly. The most important thing, apart from the performance of the scenes, was the safety of the animals and their good physical and mental condition."

The case of the fox

"Working with wild species is not easy. The fox taking part in the scene was rescued from a fur farm and brought up by us from very early childhood and has full trust in us. Furia willingly works with humans, and has a lot of experience in front of the camera. In the scene, she is in natural, forest conditions, to perform her task she was motivated by her favorite treats."

The legislation

"In Poland, we have an animal protection act. All animals, including donkeys, work up to 8 hours on the set. During our work with animals we feel responsible for them, they are our actors. We make sure that the animals do not feel stressed during the shooting, that they enjoy working and having contact with the film crew. We take care of their comfort during work on the set."

Animals were under constant care of a veterinarian, which gave us additional assurance that they are healthy and feel good. During the preparations and shooting we took care of proper breaks and resting conditions during the night."

Indoor/outdoor scenes

"Our donkeys for the film went through the whole process of preparation for the film and for particular scenes. They were previously accustomed to different conditions - forest, water, rain, different kinds of ground. They were introduced to different rooms, they learned how to work under a saddle, how to work with a cart, they got to know other animals in the film. We in turn had the opportunity to learn about their predispositions to perform particular scenes. This allowed us to smoothly perform the scenes with donkeys in every terrain and in different rooms."

Sandra Drzymalska
Kassandra

In the film "EO" by Jerzy Skolimowski, presented in the main competition at this year's Cannes Film Festival, she plays the role of Kassandra.

"This shooting was a truly amazing and magical experience and also rich in lessons. My main partner in the film was the donkey, my focus. I had to create a relationship with him, until I overcame my fears and trusted him fully. The whole movie happened like a dream.

"The pre-shooting meetings mainly consisted of getting to know each other in order to create the required climate of trust. Animals have an acute sensitivity, they sense your emotions, so I tried to stay very calm and sure of myself. I was always at close distance from them, showing them tenderness; and between takes, I would thank them.

"Working with Jerzy Skolimowski has been a pleasure. He trusts his actors by giving them a lot of freedom. He gives you very simple and specific advice. So I always knew what Jerzy expected of me.

"What makes him special is his courage, his exceptional charisma and a child's soul. Of the directors I have worked with, none are as happy with a successful scene as Jerzy."

Lorenzo Zurzolo
Vito

Lorenzo Zurzolo was born in Rome in 2000. He made his debut in the theater at the age of 14, in the title role in Pinocchio, with Giorgio Albertazzi. On Netflix, he made his debut as protagonist in BABY, the series by Andrea De Sica, and later in SOTTO IL SOLE DI RICCIONE directed by the Younuts.

In 2022 he'll star in new and various projects, as PRISMA, a TV series produced by Amazon Prime, directed by Ludovico Bessegato, on the theme of "diversity". SOTTO IL SOLE DI AMALFI, spin off of Sotto il sole di Riccione, in which he will be the protagonist of a new story focusing on problems related to blindness, DIABOLIK - 3rd installment, directed by Manetti Bros, where Lorenzo plays Diabolik at young age, and Jerzy Skolimowski's EO in a starring role with Isabelle Huppert, in competition at Cannes '22.

"Before my audition I only knew Jerzy Skolimowski by name, or almost. I had seen ESSENTIAL KILLING, which I really liked, and then I remembered the Golden Lion, which had awarded him in Venice for his entire career in 2016. Since then, I have discovered two of his chefs- d'oeuvre, DEEP END and THE SHOUT. I love the way he tells stories and I love the truth he breathes into all of his characters and the secrets they carry.

"When I read the script, I immediately understood that the character hid a seriousness, because of his troubled family past, which he had first tried to escape, before deciding to confront it.

"To facilitate my work of incarnation, Jerzy told me everything about Vito's life, from his birth to the period depicted in the film: his past, the deepest psychological reasons that motivated his choices. This description made him so real to me, that I could intimately know and understand him."

Mateusz Kościukiewicz
(Mateo)
